

Landscaping Along a Driveway Checklist

A drive way is the first view of your property that visitors will notice immediately upon arrival. How you landscape the area along the driveway gives guests and neighbors a first impression of your home. Here's a checklist of the things you need to consider when deciding to landscape the area surrounding your driveway.

Budget and Maintenance

Before deciding on the design of your interest, you need to consider the amount of time, money and effort you can give. Most of the time, money plays a big role in decision making on the materials to be used as well as maintenance. As you are planning about your budget, make sure you understand what the driveway's total cost will be over its anticipated lifetime. You can assemble free resources in your surroundings such as recycling pavers, the outdoor lumber or bricks from a previous job. Choosing perennial plants over annual ones can save money. Annuals provide only a year of beauty, while perennials can last for long years. Native plants are tended for small fertilizer, the water, the pesticide and the overall care compared to other plants which originated in other places. You can also check yard sales for materials that can help you make your landscaping design more interesting.

Design

A well planned driveway will take to account the landscape and your home's architectural theme. Furthermore, the size and design of the driveway will make an impact on how accessible your home is. You may need to think of landscaping ideas for circular driveway, as well as for straight and curve driveways. It is important to apply color harmony with the use of plants, stones, bricks and other materials that complements the structural design of your home. Proper gardening specific for the time of year can help you with the right design for your landscape.

Safety

Safety is a major concern for driveway landscaping. Always remember to allow enough pedestrian access. This will not only provide safety to both visitors in entering and exiting vehicles, but will also save you from damaging the landscape you have perfectly planned. Visibility is another factor of safety, the ability to see clearly as the other party is entering or exiting a driveway. Remember that plants that are too tall near where the driveway meets the street could cause accidents due to limited visibility.

If you have completed the checklist, it is the right time to start landscaping your driveway now.